No matter what doctors do, death is eventually inevitable. Whenever we have a fall, medicine can pick us back up, but, after a certain age, we never reach the level of health we previously held. Our health trajectory just points downward. Philip Roth in Everyman writes that "old age is not a battle; old age is a massacre" (Gawande 55). With chronic diseases, treatment merely prolongs the decline, stonewalling death but not the damage caused by the disease.
