Carbonless Copy Paper - Walmart.com

Since the early 19th century, one popular solution has been to use carbon paper: thin paper coated with pigment and wax that can be inserted between two pieces of paper (or paper and canvas) and traced over to create a faint, black copy of the original image. With the advent of desktop computers and printers, carbon paper--once an office supply staple--has gone the way of typewriters and mimeograph machines, but artists can still find "artist grade" carbon paper in art supply stores.

Carbonless or NCR forms lessen the hassle of filling out several copies of a document every time. Each set provides several copies of one form. Pressure applied with a pen on the first sheet copies the markings onto the paper underneath. This removes the need to use carbon copy paper, enabling more time-efficient transactions.

A sheet of carbon paper is placed between two or more sheets of paper. The pressure applied by the writing implement (pen, pencil, typewriter or impact printer) to the top sheet causes pigment from the carbon paper to reproduce the similar mark on the copy sheet(s). More than one copy can be made by stacking several sheets with carbon paper between each pair. Four or five copies is a practical limit. The top sheet is the original and each of the additional sheets is called a carbon copy.
