So, earlier this year, I've had a chance to read "In Secret Tibet," which seemed to be about his so-called "experiences" in Tibet. To be honest, I have found this book to be entertaining yet interesting because it portrays the truth about "wise" people with a tendency to lull people for their own agendas.

India only recognized Tibet as part of China in 2003. India first established the military unit of Tibetan refugees, known as the Special Frontier Force, just after the 1962 India-China war to carry out covert operations behind Chinese lines, according to Jayadeva Ranade, a member of the National Security Council Advisory Board. Akin to U.S. special forces, every member is trained as a para-commando and operates undercover in conjunction with the Indian military.
