1. If we don't see the need, we will never build bridges! 2. We may wind up building barriers instead. 3. If the gospel is real, then the gulf is real! 4. There is a great gulf between darkness and light...between eternal life and eternal death. 5. There is a great gulf between fulfilling our God-given purpose as believers, and just existing. 6.

Bridge of the Gods (land bridge) - Wikipedia

In his 1955 book, The Bridges of God, McGavran wrote the one sentence for which he became most famous, or, in the minds of some, infamous: "Men like to become Christians without crossing racial, linguistic, or class barriers." His 1970 book, In Understanding Church Growth, became the standard work in the field.

The book is The Bridges of God. It was written by Donald McGavran and published in 1955. I believe that the book was such a break-through in missiological thinking and practice because of the crucial question that it asks: "How do Peoples, not just individuals, but clans, tribes, and castes, become Christian?"
