Finding unsuspected links between dissimilar individuals, between apparently incompatible opinions, and between the past and the present is one of the first steps on the path to hidden pleasures. It is sometimes salutary to see the world not only in bright and contrasting colours, but also in sepia, with the frontiers blurred by unexpected commonalities.

It's here! Lost In Thought: The Hidden Pleasures of an Intellectual Life is newly published by Princeton University Press. In it I defend intellectual activity--reading, thinking, studying, pondering--as worthwhile for its own sake, and as a key part of human happiness. You can order it at the Press, or Barnes and Noble or find it...

Zena Hitz

"In her rich and rewarding book Lost in Thought: The Hidden Pleasures of an Intellectual Life, Professor Zena Hitz argues that the goal of education is not the status or privileges it confers upon us, or even the valuable life skills it demands that we acquire. In line with classical pagan and Christian traditions, she argues that we have a natural desire to understand the world outside of us, and that a true education carefully cultivates this natural love of learning and helps to bring it ...

Lost in Thought: The Hidden Pleasures of an Intellectual Life. Zena Hitz is a Tutor in the great books program at St. John's College in Annapolis, Maryland. She has a PhD in ancient philosophy from Princeton University and studies and teaches across the liberal arts. In her book most recent book "Lost in Thought: The Hidden Pleasures of an Intellectual Life," Zena quite artfully explains the ideals of a commitment to intellectual life, and the book inspires fundamental rethinking of our ...

Lost in Thought: The Hidden Pleasures of an Intellectual Life

"Lost in Thought is a moving declaration of faith in the intellectual act at a time when everything we do seems to conspire against it."—Alberto Manguel, author of Packing My Library "Lost in Thought recounts the thrilling story of how Zena Hitz overcame the anxiety of uselessness, the fear that immersion in the intellectual life cuts one off from what really matters.

The idea that learning can be a mode of release from those ambitions, and thus a kind of liberation from the world, seems to have been lost to us. However, in Lost in Thought: The Hidden Pleasures of an Intellectual Life (Princeton UP, 2020), Zena Hitz provides a vision of how learning is a characteristically human activity that is essential for a fulfilled life.
